Definition of Cookies

For the purpose of this policy and in keeping with the prevalent understanding of the term "cookie" in the World Wide Web, a cookie is a small piece of text that is sent by the server to a browser. The browser provides this piece of text to the originating server when the visitor returns.

The Website is designed in a way that does not require cookies to be created by the Website's server and sent to the user's browser, and therefore the Website server does not expose the user to cookies.

However, you will always find the most recent version on this page. Please therefore re-visit this Cookie Policy regularly to stay informed about our use of cookies and related technologies.
